

My two top picks for 2007

It has been a while since I've touted the amazing effects of a beauty product or procedure, but I've got one I can completely recommend. You've got to try the BioMedic MicroPeel at SkinPros in the Center for Plastic Surgery at 6630 S. McCarran Blvd. It's so good I considered not writing about it so I could keep this secret to myself. I had one a few months ago, and saved this secret as my favorite treatment/beauty product of 2007.

SIOBHAN MCANDREW
smcandre@rgj.com

The BioMedic MicroPeel is a three-step, 75-minute light acid peel that removes a micro-thin layer of skin. It is referred to as the lunchtime peel.

I've only had it done once, but my refreshed and glowing results lasted for weeks. Lisa Mueller, who did my peel, said the results after a series is even better, so I plan on sticking to at least one resolution and going for a series of four in 2008. The results I got deserve a good journalistic follow-up.

And it gets better. The peel isn't much more than a regular facial. It costs $100 and you can buy a series of four at an introductory price of $350.

For information call Lisa Mueller, the SkinPros manager at 828-0118 or e-mail skinpros@bonaldimd.com.